Stephen Gabor and Patrick Allen, of Gabor + Allen, create design build and landscape projects that cover a breadth of styles, and always feel tasteful and inviting.

Responsive and open-minded, Stephen and Patrick use solid design principles to refine their clients' ideas. "Often improving a home's design is about making the lines cleaner, and finding simple changes that open up the space—for instance, moving a kitchen counter to align with cabinets, and removing a wall that separates the dining room and kitchen."

To enhance flow in their landscapes, Stephen and Patrick find ways to transition between elements. For example, they might extend the flagstone tiles used in an outdoor dining area a few feet into the garden in order to invite exploration. And as members of the United States Green Building Council and the Santa Monica Sustainable Landscape Professionals Program, Gabor + Allen utilize sustainable materials and practices.

Patrick and Stephen are realistic with pricing and take a creative approach to making the most of their client's budget. To create more space for a homeowner who lacked sufficient funds for an addition, they opened walls and improved the design of her existing second story space, increasing the value and aesthetics of the home overall. To reduce costs, they might re-face cabinets, so the client can afford new countertops. They can also plan projects in phases, so clients can proceed as their budgets allow.

Why should you hire them? Stephen quips: "We play well with our clients!" Patrick joins in: "We love to collaborate, and people know we can be trusted in our performance."
